

ABSTRACT

A method of charging a battery having an internal resistance and an external resistance connected to the battery includes applying electrical energy to the battery. The method also includes adjusting, at a plurality of s predetermined intervals, the electrical energy applied to the battery based on at least one of the internal resistance of the battery and the external resistance connected to the battery.